Gets Back His Note.

Dr. Solomon Lemon of 71 Washington street, Salem, wrote a note, sealed it in an empty whisky bottle and, as a prank, threw it overboard from the steamer Munargo, 50 miles off Hanava, on August 22, 1932. The note has since been returned to him at his home in Salem.

The note was picked up by Mrs. E. M. Moore of Charleston, S. C., at Bull Island Beach in that city last October. The message, offering a reward for return of the note, was still legible. Dr. Lemon kept his word about the reward.

Sues Trawler.

Suit was started yesterday in Federal District court at Boston before Judge Elisha H. Brewster and a jury in the case of Peter Mohle of K street, South Boston, who is suing the owners of the trawler Georgetown for damages because of injuries to his left hand which he alleged was cut by a wire on a trawler door.

Plaintiff testified to incidents leading up to the injuries while he was working on the trawler, May 20, 1931, on the North Atlantic fishing grounds

TODAY'S RECEIPTS LIGHT AGAIN

ONLY TWO ARRIVALS REPORTED
HERE SINCE YESTERDAY.

There was a scarcity of fresh fish locally today, for during the past 24 hours, aside from gill net receipts, the only fish to be brought to port came from a couple of small trawlers, one having 1200 pounds of groundfish and the other 400 pounds. Practically the entire fleet of draggers and trawlers is out today, and has been since yesterday morning, and tomorrow, dealers expect a fair supply of fish.

Yesterday ten gill netters fished and their total catch amounted to 15,000 pounds. Two of the local haddock fleet at Boston yesterday, came here to refit for fishing.

Batter Np!

The season for recovering strange objects from the stomachs of codfish, rapidly becoming scavengers of the sea is now on.

Capt. Eric Colsen of the local schooner Pollyanna, in at the Fisht Pier, at Boston, yesterday from the Cape Shore grounds, off Nova Scotia, told of how Louis Amiro, one of the crew, dressing a cod on Monday, found a rubber ball inside. The ball, about as large as one of those used in tennis, had evidently been lost or thrown overboard from some passenger liner in the vicinity.

Fitting for Trawling.

The dragger Marietta B., sold at U. S. marshal's sale recently to satisfy claims brought against her, is completing an extensive reconditioning and will rejoin the fishing fleet Monday, under a new name, the Cambridge. Capt. Tony Magnussen, brother of Capt. Magnus Magnussen, now on the beam trawler Hekia, is to have command.

N. S. Fish Notes

The salt-laden sch. Nellie T. Walters, 11 days overdue at North Sydney, has survived recent gales that swept the Atlantic and was expected at Sydney Wednesday if the wind held.

R. T. Sainthill and Company, agents for the 175-ton vessel, received a message from an unidentified steamer about 100 miles off the coast stating that she had spoken the Nellie Walters.

The position given by the steamer was 44.03 north and 56.42 west.

The message relieved anxiety felt here during the last few days for the safety of Capt. Thomas Walters and his crew of eight. They sailed from Cadiz, Spain, on November 24.

Lobstermen around Stormy Island are still making fair catches. Something that was unheard of locally before is the fact that fishermen are cod fishing in January. The men go out, catch fish, haul and bait their lobster traps and call it a day's work.

Better results are being obtained by using fresh fish as bait, than using the salted herring bait. The price of lobsters still is 14 cents.
